Courtyard warm-up: A drum and bugle corps does stretches in the courtyard, August 2006. Drum Corps International held their world championship finals in Madison and rehearsal space on the streets seemed to be at a premium. Weeks Hall residents were treated to plenty of music and marching, just outside.

Courtyard cool-down: Basil Tikoff uses a snow shovel to demonstrate imbrication of thrust faults in a thrust belt and maintaining critical taper angle (the way a shovel pushes snow). He’s talking to his 455 structure class, November 2006. (Photos by Mary Diman)

Thank you for your support!
Stand back: John Valley’s liquid nitrogen “volcano” demonstrates the power of a steam explosion for students in Geology 100.

Step forward: The Courtyard Brick Program was established by the Board of Visitors. By purchasing a customized brick, alumni can be permanently underfoot while supporting the department. See page 65 or our website. <http://www.geology.wisc.edu/alumni/bricks.html>

Roadside Geology of Wisconsin

by Robert H. Dott, Jr. and John Attig

Robert H. Dott, Jr., emeritus professor of geology at UW-Madison, and John W. Attig, professor at the Wisconsin Geological and Natural History Survey, have a long history of leading field trips around the state. They have written a guidebook in which they recount the geologic evolution of places that people can see from their cars or can access readily from state highways. The 346-page book is heavily illustrated with more than 200 maps, figures, and photographs.

The price is $20; shipping charges are extra. Profits from the sale of this book are donated to the Department of Geology and Geophysics. Visa and MasterCard are accepted.
